

THE LITERARY ESSAY

Writing about short stories, poems, novels, and plays

THE BASICS:

- Never refer to an author by their first name only.
- Italicize or underline novels and plays.
- Put titles of poems and short stories in "Quotation Marks."
- Distinguish the author, who wrote the work, from the narrator, who tells the story. In fiction, the author is never the "I" or the storytelling voice.
- Use the present tense to discuss the story, but past tense to talk about real events.
 - See the handout Verb Tenses: Writing about Fiction and Nonfiction.

- ✓ First time: James Joyce says
- ✓ After: Joyce says or the author says
- ✗ James says

Dubliners, Romeo and Juliet

"Sonnet 54" "The Raven"
"The Cask of Amontillado"

Agatha Christie's narrator, Doctor Sheppard, admits, "I am not going to pretend that ... I foresaw the events of the next few weeks" (1).

James Joyce stayed in Paris when he wrote Ulysees (real event). In his novel, the main character walks through the streets of Dublin (fictional event).

QUOTATIONS & ANALYSIS:

- Keep quotations brief and to the point. Quote key words and short phrases.
- Make sure your quote fits your sentence grammatically.
 - Quote a full sentence.
The narrator says, "I came to see the dawn."
 - Use [square brackets] to replace pronouns and past tense verbs if they do not fit your grammar.
Emerson is at peace because [he] drink[s] at the stream of time."
She "finally [runs] to the beach."
 - Use ellipses (...) to skip unnecessary parts.
 - See the handout: Quotations.
- Analyze your quotation after providing it.
 - Explain how the quote links to your thesis and supports it.
The narrator explains how "he ... finally told [him] the truth."
 - Aim for at least two sentences of analysis for every quotation (see next page).
Gabriel then tactlessly states that he will see Lily at her "wedding with [her] young man" (Joyce 6). Here Gabriel implies that ...

LITERARY TECHNIQUES AND DEVICES:

- Identify literary techniques and devices if required by your teacher.
 - Safe bets:
 - Novels and short stories: Setting, imagery, description, flashback, and symbolism.
 - Poetry: Symbolism, imagery, tone, alliteration, rhyme, and meter.
 - Plays: Dialogue, monologue, symbolism, and setting.

KEEP
READ
ING

THE LITERARY ESSAY

Continued

Title indicates topic and suggests thesis

An Analysis of Gabriel’s Self-Estrangement in James Joyce’s “The Dead”

by Sam Fisher

Introduction:

Hook

James Joyce’s “The Dead” explores the theme of being alienated from one’s self. Gabriel, the Essential background information

main character in “The Dead,” is a member of the Irish upper class in early twentieth-century Dublin. Despite being surrounded by a rather conservative family and group of friends, Gabriel identifies himself as progressive, does not believe in class distinctions, and promotes the idea of leaving Ireland to explore the modern world. However, an analysis of Gabriel’s conversation with Lily, his speech at the dinner table, and his thoughts when observing the snow falling all over Ireland reveal how Gabriel

Thesis statement (phrased to include a preview of three main points) ultimately alienates himself from his modern ideas.

Body Paragraph:

Topic Sentence

During Gabriel’s conversation with Lily, the assumptions he makes about her due to her gender and social class lead him to realize that he may not be as progressive as he would like to be.

First Sub-Point

Evidence: Given as brief summary

When Gabriel first enters Misses Morkans’ house for their annual dance, Lily, the maid, greets him and helps him remove his coat and boots. Gabriel starts a conversation with Lily, which would have been unusual at the time given the gap between their social classes. The fact that Gabriel speaks to Lily can be perceived as evidence that he does not support class distinctions. During the exchange, Gabriel asks Lily whether she is still in school, to which she replies that she is not. Gabriel then tactlessly states that he supposes he will see Lily at her “wedding [...] with [her] young man” (Joyce 6). Here Gabriel implies that because Lily is not getting an education and that she has little money, her only resort is to find a man who will marry and support her. This assumption suggests that Gabriel does not think that members of the lower class have a very high potential. There is also arguably some sexism to this assumption; Gabriel may believe that because Lily is a woman she cannot survive alone and needs a man by her side. Gabriel tells himself that he believes in gender equality and in the abolition of class distinctions. However, his conversation with Lily suggests otherwise. Gabriel realizes this and may begin to ask himself what his principles mean if he does not live according to them.

Analysis

Second Sub-Point

Evidence: Introduced and given as a brief quotation

Analysis

Wrap-up Statement

Conclusion:

Recap of three main points, which serve as a restatement of the thesis

~~~~~ Other body paragraphs have been skipped ~~~~~

In conclusion, Gabriel first realizes that he does not always live according to his progressive principles when he speaks to Lily. At the dinner table, Gabriel makes a conscious effort to distance himself from his modern ideas. Ultimately, Gabriel has an epiphany while observing the snow through his hotel window: progressive ideology does not have its place in early twentieth-century Ireland.

Discussion of the insights arising from the entire essay

Through these three moments in Gabriel’s night, it is clear that he completely alienates himself from his avant-garde ideas.

Source: Fisher, Sam. "An Analysis of Gabriel's Self-Estrangement in James Joyce's 'The Dead.'" Dawson English Journal, no. 7, Winter 2016, <https://www.dawsonenglishjournal.ca/issue/issue-7/>.

For more information, contact the Academic Skills Centre.