Introduction to the Retention Schedule

Preamble

Dawson College is a public body, and is subject to the Archives Act. Under the act, the College must establish and keep an updated retention schedule.

Presentation

The retention schedule specifies the periods of use and retention of active and semi-active records. It also specifies which inactive documents are to be preserved permanently, or transferred to the archives, or securely destroyed based on their legal, administrative, or historical values.

The schedule is an important tool allowing the College to:

- Meet the requirements of laws and regulations
- Facilitate the management of active and inactive records by determining retention periods
- Ensure the preservation of its heritage

Classification Plan

The classification plan is designed to support the organization of documents for ease of consultation and use.

Essential Documents

Records essential to the operation of Dawson College and ensure the continuity of operations following a disaster.

Glossary

888: Files with this code have a variable active period and an event will trigger the closure of the file. These files can be open indefinitely (for example an employee file is active while the person is a Dawson employee), and are not closed until an event triggers closure (the employment ends).

999: This signals a file that is closed when a new edition of the record is released. Policies are an excellent example of this. While we may retain the old policy for reference, the new policy is the active record.

Active record: a record that has not been closed and which is required for the day-to-day functioning of an agency or person. These records are kept in on-site storage. May also be referred to as a current record.

Classification system: a set of terms and business rules that can be applied to records to facilitate capture, retrieval, maintenance and disposal.

Destruction: the process of eliminating or deleting records beyond any possible reconstruction. Destruction should be carried out by an approved method such as shredding or, in the case of electronic records, rendering them unreadable.

Document: recorded information or an object that can be treated as a unit.

Electronic record: a record created, communicated and/or maintained by means of electronic equipment. Although this term can refer to analogue materials (eg. videotapes), it generally refers to records held in digital form on magnetic or optical computer storage media.

Essential records: The records without which an organisation could not continue to operate, i.e. those containing information needed to re-establish the organisation in the event of a disaster. Essential records are those that protect the assets and interests of the organisation as well as those of its clients and shareholders.

File (1): An organised unit of documents accumulated during current use and kept together because they deal with the same subject, activity or transaction.

File (2): The action of placing documents in a predetermined location according to a scheme of control.

Final disposition: describes what is to be done with records once they have become inactive. Common dispositions are destruction, triage, or transfer of ownership to the National Archives.

Inactive record: a record that is not required to be readily available for the business purposes of a department or agency and may therefore be transferred to intermediate storage, archival custody or be destroyed subject to applicable laws.

Office of primary responsibility: The office, department, or position responsible for maintaining the integrity of a record.

Official copy: record created by/for the OPR of the record, will be the most complete information.

Off-site storage: a general term describing location arrangements for records. The storage might be leased by the agency or held by a storage provider. The agency contracts the storage provider to care for the records on their behalf.

Record: all information created, sent and received in the course of carrying out the business of your agency. Records have many formats, including paper and electronic. Records provide proof of what happened, when it happened and who made decisions. Not all records are of equal importance or need to be kept.

Retention period: The length of time after the disposal trigger that a record must be maintained and accessible. At the expiration of the retention period, a record may be subject to disposal.

Secondary copy: these copies are working copies, convenience copies, or reference copies. They should be used and retained only as long as needed, and destruction is always the final disposition.

Semi-active record: a record required so infrequently in the conduct of current business that it can be transferred from offices to separate storage areas. These records are no longer required for day-to-day operations, however they retain some administrative, legal, audit, or fiscal value.

Triage: a type of final disposition. Sorting documents to either be destroyed or conserved.
